

Men and Women of Greenock who died as a result of the War of 1939-1945.

Published by the Corporation of the Burgh of Greenock

In proud and sorrowing remembrance the Burgh of Greenock has recorded in this volume the names of the 880 Greenock folk whose lives were part of the price our country paid for victory in the war 1939-45.

Of this Number there were 451 (including three young women) who served in the Armed Forces.

Their's it was, with many another, to follow the path of Duty wheresoeer it led, and to employ their skill and courage in whatever capacity was required of them—on land, in the great waters, or in the upper air.

Their mortal remains rest in Scotland, in the continent of Europe, in Africa or in the far places of the East. And some there be who have no known grave.

Not even in the Greenock homes where their loss is most deeply felt and their memory most lovingly cherished would it be asserted that these men and women who died in the Services did their duty more gallantly than the thousands who marched or sailed or flew with them—yet lived to come back home.

But Death, which brushes past one fighting man and beckons another, claimed from these 451 the last full measure of devotion to the cause for which all fought so resolutely; and it is fitting that their names should be recorded here by the Burgh which was proud to count them among its citizens.

Of those from Greenock who died in the common cause, another 158 served in the Merchant Navy.

Engineer or carpenter, fireman or galleyboy, steward or seaman, their task it was to form part of the great machine that moved men and materials across the changing face of the waters so that victory could at last be won.

The motive power of that machine was the quiet acceptance of risks, the unassuming courage that faced without flinching the eternal hazards of the sea and the deadly devices of the enemy. Without this the efforts and sacrifices of the Armed Forces, and the endurance and labour of those at home, had all been in vain.

In this book are also recorded the names of 271 civilians — men, women and even little children—whose lives were lost as the result of enemy attacks on our native town.

Some among these were in the Civil Defence Services. They were of those who, by their own free will, put themselves in the way of danger that they might lessen the danger to others or succour the injured in their need.

The greater number of those who died from enemy bombardment, however, were ordinary folk, wearing neither uniform nor badge—folk who were chosen for no high service but who, in whatever way was open to them, were doing what they could to further the end for which all were striving.

When a cause is given over to the fierce arbitrament of war, all that is certain is that many lives will be lost before the end is won. None can tell whose life will be claimed and whose will be spared.

Even now we cannot, with our finite eyes, discern why certain ones among all those Greenock folk who worked and fought for victory should have been called on to lay down their lives while others were spared. We cannot hope to understand why some should pass through unparalleled danger and returned unscathed, while others fell at their side or were struck down in their homes.

We can only believe that this was not blind Chance. We can only trust that, in some way not yet known to us, these lost lives were an integral part of the pattern of ultimate victory.

So the Burgh of Greenock records in this volume the names of those who died — with pride that they bore themselves well unto the last, and with sympathy for all those whose lives were darkened by their passing.

But, recalling what was done to keep this nation free, we do not forget that much still remains to be achieved. This volume is therefore not only a record of the past but an earnest for the future. It is a symbol of our rededication to the task of making this burgh, this nation, and this world, a better and a happier place for those generations yet to come.
